Richard Watson is one of the industry's most well-regarded horse professionals. For the past 60 years, Richard has ridden and trained cutting horses, polo ponies, eventers, and now Grand Prix Jumpers. Richard lives in Alachua, Florida and travels all over the country giving clinics and lessons from walk/trot to grand prix jumping. Several of his students at the Grand Prix level have competed against the best in the business and consistently finish in the top 10. Richard specializes in helping riders at all levels develop greater feel and believes this is at the heart of promoting good horsemanship, whatever the discipline. Among Richard's achievements is the creation of a horse bit that promises control with a lighter touch. Now owned by the Mikmar Bit Company, it can be found today in many tack shops and catalogues listed as the "Watson Snaffle".
